General nature

- Broader migratory movements have become progressively more complex
- Important characteristics of mixed flows: vulnerability associated with irregular status (aggravated in border areas)
- Governments should move beyond security concerns by mainstreaming international migration in national development plans and strategies at the national and regional levels.
- Migrant workers' rights are eroded further in situations of economic recession and general uncertainty
- South South migration: Despite increasing importance in the migration scenario, its potential impact on development remains under researched
