At this CPD, Member States will follow through on the decision they took three years ago to "extend the Programme of Action and the key actions for its further implementation beyond 2014, and ensure its follow-up in order to fully meet its goals and objectives."

To aid the process, the General Assembly mandated a review of implementation.

The ICPD review, based on the voices and data of 176 Member States, input from civil society
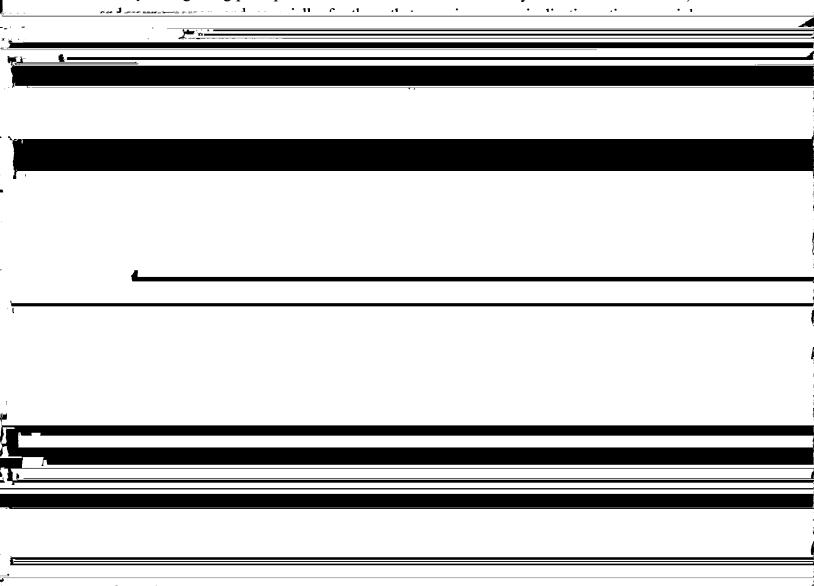

They don't tell her story because she is invisible – too young to appear in surveys or statistics, and perhaps, like 1 in 3 children in developing countries, even her birth was never registered. Lacking this passport to protection, exercising her rights is all but impossible. She isn't counted; she isn't reached.

The outcome of this CPD, and the success of continued implementation of the Programme of Action, should be judged by whether we are able to reduce inequalities and to bring the promises of 1994 to all people – including, and especially, to that 11-year-old girl.
Dignity, Rights and Non-Discrimination for All, without Distinction of Any Kind

The ICPD Programme of Action reaffirmed that "all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, without distinction of any kind...."

Too often, though, individuals' dignity and rights are undermined by persistent discrimination, stigma and exclusion. The review finds that this discrimination has great cost to people and to society. Our guiding principle must be "without distinction of any kind." For each woman, man

Despite near-universal commitment to ending child marriage, one in three girls in developing countries is married before they turn 18 – one out of nine girls before their 15th birthday. Most

Investing in young people is the key to sustainability. And how we meet the needs of young

By bridging individual dignity and rights with collective sustainability, the Cairo Agenda, its