Introduction

2. The NVP process and its outcomes

NVPs and sustainable development

National consultations

An initial draft of the national report is the main input for threational consultations NVP countries hold consultative dialogues, in the case of programme countries, national workshops undertake multistakeholder reviews. Such national consultations attimeontribute to improving public and intragovernmental debate on issues relating to the implementation of threetherment strategy and priority setting in pursuit of sustainable development objectives.

National consultations assist countries in assessirprogress towards their development objectives and the implementation of their national development attrategies with the broad participation of key stakeholders. Participants shoulindclude policy makers, government representatives and representatives from the non-state sectors, such as thirdanks and academia, civil society and the private sector. Such broad participation facilitate agement and ownership, the identification of successes and gaps and contribute sharpening policy recommendations. eTh workshops caralsobe used to assess national best practices and lessons learned.
