

BACKGROUND NOTE

PATHWAYS TO PARTNERSHIPS

Gender inequality deprives countries of a critical resource in the struggle to end poverty and attain stability. Women and girls continuously lack the same access as men to education, health care, food, jobs, property and decision-making powers in the political, social, and business sectors. Economists confirm that women's empowerment is a central engine for development – if they cannot participate, the targets that governments and the United Nations set will continue to go unmet. The Nobel Prize winning economist, Professor Amartya Sen, speaks of more than 100 million “missing women” in developing countries who die of cumulative neglect because they are continually treated differently than men, especially in health care, medical attention and access to food and social services. Other studies speak of 60 – 101 million missing women on the basis of ratios of women to men. Every year, at least another 2 million girls die worldwide because of inequality and neglect. Moreover, women and girls become victims of gender-based violence, which entails severe physical and mental health implications and, consequently, enormous social and economic costs. The current economic and financial crises deepen gender inequality, as economic recession affects women and men, girls and boys differently.

There are mechanisms in place to support women's economic and social empowerment and innovative programmes are producing remarkable results. The last 20 years have also seen unprecedented progress in the political attention paid to violence against women and girls, as well as in the number and scope of laws and policies to prevent and respond to gender-based violence. First results are encouraging but still apply only to a small number of places. The effort is woefully under-resourced, much more needs to be done such as the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), have established partnerships to integrate the private sector's perspective, its networks and expertise in their work, in order to effectively implement the international development policies and make change happen, where it is most needed.

SPECIAL EVENT

For the third time, the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC) is convening a special event in New York to strengthen partnerships of the United Nations and its agencies, funds and programmes with the business and philanthropic communities. This event is co-organized by the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), UNOP and UNIFEM, in collaboration with the Committee Encouraging Corporate Philanthropy (CECP). Experts, public figures and corporate and non-corporate foundations are being invited to discuss possible partnerships in support of the international development agenda. The main focus of this year's event will be on ending violence against women and girls and promoting women's economic empowerment. These two issue areas have been chosen in consultation with the United Nations experts, as well as cooperating partner organizations. Events, such as this special event, activate and actualize the potential of all possible actors. Those seeking to engage in the process of making a difference are strongly encouraged to lend this unique ability by engaging in this collaborative conversation.

EXPECTED OUTCOME

The key outcome of the special event will be to provide increased focus of the philanthropic as well as international communities on issues central to the achievement of gender equality and women's empowerment. To succeed, it is essential to broaden the range of stakeholders involved in the work of the United Nations in this field. Awareness among the philanthropic community should be increased on the progress that has already been made and outline the challenges that countries face in achieving, in particular MDG 3. It is hoped that concrete initiatives by the philanthropic community and the creation of new partnerships between United Nations entities, Member States and the philanthropic organizations would accelerate progress in reaching the targets. One initial step could be to expand multi-stakeholder engagement in the Secretary-General's Campaign UNiTE to End Violence Against Women.

THE ORGANIZERS

DESA serves as the secretariat of ECOSOC and supports its deliberations and consensus-building of Member States. This demands high-level engagement on many global development issues and consultations with international financial institutions, the private sector and civil society. DESA operates within a framework of internationally agreed upon goals known as the United Nations Development Agenda: a shared vision of human progress rooted in the values of freedom, equality, solidarity, tolerance, respect for nature and mutual responsibility. DESA are used worldwide. DESA also manages the Development Account, a fund established by the General Assembly to help countries meet their development challenges.

Contact: Mr. Ajit Yogasundram, yogasundram@un.org, www.un.org/esa/desa

UNOP serves as a gateway for public-private partnerships with the United Nations system. It aims to help the underprivileged by harnessing the interest, competencies and resources across sectors. Working with leaders in business and civil society, UNOP provides a platform for strategic policy dialogue and engages financial, technical, and management expertise to achieve the MDGs.