

Editing of resolutions at the United Nations

Presentation for the information of delegations

Introduction

The Editing Section edits all United Nations documents, including draft resolutions, to make them clear, accurate, consistent, grammatically correct, in conformity with United Nations editorial standards and translatable into the other five official languages. All draft resolutions are normally edited, translated, formatted, proofread and reproduced by DGACM within 48 hours of submission. With such a short turnaround time it is essential that the editor have the contact information of the main sponsor or facilitator so that any questions can be cleared up quickly.

Delegates should also be aware that when they are preparing a draft resolution that is based on a previous resolution, they should download the final version of the adopted text (usually available under the symbol A/RES/xx/xx) and use it as the basis for the new resolution. This not only saves precious processing time, but also improves accuracy.

After adoption, resolutions and decisions are concorded in all six languages. This is the process by which differences in meanings among the language versions are corrected. Such differences are usually the result of ambiguity in the original language version. The editors recognize that “constructive ambiguity” is sometimes intentionally used to facilitate agreement on a sensitive text. In consultation with the facilitator/sponsor, editors can help to ensure that the message is identical in all the languages while preserving the desired level of vagueness. At the concordance stage, changes made by delegates at the time of adoption of the resolution are incorporated in the final text and source references (footnotes) are added or

Once adopted, these important international instruments belong to the world. Many of them will be cited for years, even decades, to come. For this reason, it is imperative that they be grammatically and factually correct, consistent and equivalent in all six official languages.

Unfortunately, the time pressure under which resolutions are negotiated and processed increases the chance of mistakes. Furthermore, ambiguous language in the original language version of a resolution can lead to different interpretations in the other five languages. United Nations editors are highly qualified professionals who are conversant in at least three of the six official languages. They are experts in spotting language that could have different interpretations, playing a key role in carrying out the General Assembly's mandates on multilingualism, equal treatment for all six languages and equally authentic resolutions in all six languages. In addition to ensuring the highest quality of resolutions, editors play a key role as coordinators because, by solving problems in the original language version, one editor saves five translators from having to independently solve the same problems.

It is interesting to note that throughout the world, legal texts are often edited following negotiation and adoption. There was a recent article in the New York Times, for example, about the revision of United States Supreme Court decisions after their issuance (http://www.nytimes.com/2014/05/25/us/final-word-on-us-law-isnt-supreme-court-keeps-editing.html?_r=0).

Structure of resolutions

Paragraphs

Resolutions are essentially one long sentence. There are normally three elements in a resolution: the name of the organ, the preamble and the operative part.

- x Preambular paragraphs are not numbered. They serve to present the background to the action part of the resolution. Preambular paragraphs must begin with a verb in the form of a present, past or perfect participle or an adjective in italics. Examples of the types of verbs and adjectives used in preambular paragraphs are provided in the annex.
- x Operative paragraphs are numbered. They express the opinions of Member States and contain the action that they are agreeing to take. Operative paragraphs must begin with an action verb. Examples are provided in the annex.
- x When the opening verb of a paragraph is repeated in the following paragraph(s), the words also is used. If the verb is repeated a second time

- (a) To take effective measures to ensure...
- (b) To foster religious freedom and pluralism...
- (c) To encourage the representation and meaningful participation of...

time the draft is submitted and the time the resolution is adopted, the verbs will be adjusted from future to past accordingly.

x Names of countries. In United Nations documents and resolutions, the short form of the names of countries is used. For a list of the official short names of countries, see unterm.un.org.

x Names of cities.

Reaffirms paragraph 37 of its resolution 62/87 and paragraph 2 of its resolution 64/228, and requests the Secretary-General to complete the capital master plan as approved by the General Assembly in various resolutions.

The editor will consult with the author to determine the preferred formulation in such cases.

- x Footnotes. At the concordance stage, source footnotes may be added if the source is available in all official languages. Similarly, sources not available in all languages may be deleted.
- x Seasons of the year. As seasons of the year are different in different hemispheres, the editor will change a reference to “the summer of 2014”, for example, to “the third quarter of 2014”.
- x Including, inter alia. The use of “including” together with “inter alia” is redundant. The editor will delete one of them.
