

Remarks by H.E. Csaba K r ösi, President of the 77th session of the General Assembly
Second International Day for Countering Hate Speech
Monday, 19 June 2023

Madam Special Adviser,
Excellencies,
Distinguished Delegates,

It is an honour to join you to mark the second International Day for Countering Hate Speech.

My deep thanks to the Permanent Mission of Morocco and the Office of the SG's Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide for organizing today's event.

It would be my wish that we would not have to observe this day.

It would be my wish that hate speech were a thing of the past.

Into violence towards minorities.

Towards those worshipping at synagogues, mosques, temples and churches, or not worshipping at all.

Towards those who heard the first word from their mothers' lips not in the language of the majority.

Towards those working to defend human rights or upholding the peaceful transfer of power.

As new channels reach wider audiences, tech companies are struggling to take action.

How can we, the international community, step up our response?

This is a question of responsibilities. Shared responsibilities.

Marking this International Day encourages us all to do our part – by identifying hate speech early, confronting it directly, and halting it immediately.

The UN Strategy and Plan of Action on Hate Speech, launched three years ago, offer us a firm step in the right direction.

They recognize hate speech as a precursor to atrocity crimes, including genocide and crimes against humanity, and call for coordinated action to address the drivers.

However, I urge Member States to do so with full respect for human rights.

We must cherish the freedoms of expression, press, religion, and belief that are integral to well-functioning, vibrant societies, without tolerating discrimination under the protections they provide.

Here, we have to strike the right balance.

And, to tackle the misperceptions that form the basis of hate speech, we must place education at the core of our efforts.

To enlighten the public and to fight fatuities, we need help from all stakeholders of goodwill: governments, civil society, the private sector, the media, academia, and faith leaders.

"There are two ways of exerting one's strength," to quote Booker T. Washington: "One is pushing down, the other is pulling up."

As we meet today on “Juneteenth” –