III. Elements for discussion in the high-level round table

A. Background

11. Commitments on financing for gender equality and the empowerment of women have been made by Governments at the global level, including at the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995), the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly (2000) and the Millennium Summit (2000). There has been, however, limited assessment of progress made in allocating resources to translate global commitments into action at the national level.

12. In its discussion of the resources required for the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women, the Platform for Action emphasized that funding had to be identified and mobilized from all sources and across all sectors.⁵ Governments, holding the primary responsibility for implementing the strategic objectives of the Platform for Action, should make efforts to systematically review how women benefit from public sector expenditures, adjust budgets to ensure equality of access to public sector expenditures and achieve the gender-related commitments made in other United Nations summits and conferences.⁶

13. The Platform for Action noted that sufficient resources should be allocated to national machineries for the advancement of women as well as to all institutions, as appropriate, that could contribute to the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action.⁷ Governments should create a supportive environment for the mobilization of resources by non-governmental organizations, particularly women's organizations and networks, feminist groups, the private sector and other actors of civil society, to enable them to contribute towards that end.⁸

14. The Platform for Action called for adequate financial resources for implementation of the Platform for Action in the developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries. Furthermore, countries involved in development cooperation should conduct a critical analysis of their assistance programmes so as to improve the quality and effectiveness of aid through the integration of a gender approach.⁹

15. The Platform for Action noted that to strengthen their support for actions at the national level and to enhance their contributions to coordinated follow-up by the United Nations, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should set out the specific actions they would undertake, including goals and targets to realign priorities and redirect resources to meet the global priorities identified in the Platform for Action.¹⁰ The Platform for Action further noted that the resources provided for the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies by the international community needed to be sufficient and should be maintained at an adequate level.¹¹

16. The Platform for Action also addressed the need for resources in undertaking specific actions to achieve the strategic objectives relating to each critical area of concern. Among proposed actions were providing sufficient budgetary resources in the areas of education and training, women and health, violence against women, institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women, and the girl-child, and providing funding or resources to support specific actions in the areas of women and poverty, education and training, women and health, violence against women, women and armed conflict, women and the economy, institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women, human rights of women, and women and the media. The subsequent agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women and the resolutions of other intergovernmental bodies, including the General Assembly, have also called for allocation of resources for the promotion of gender equality in different areas.¹²

17. At its twenty-third special session, the General Assembly called upon Governments to incorporate a gender perspective into the design, development, adoption and execution of all budgetary processes, as appropriate, in order to promote equitable and effective resource allocation and establish adequate budgetary allocations to support gender equality and development programmes that enhanced women's empowerment and to develop the necessary analytical and methodological tools and mechanisms for monitoring and evaluation.¹³ Governments were also called upon to provide national machineries with the necessary human and financial resources, including through exploring innovative funding schemes, so that gender mainstreaming was integrated into all policies, programmes and projects.¹⁴ The United Nations system and international and regional organizations were called upon to allocate sufficient resources to regional and national programmes to implement the Platform for Action in its 12 critical areas of concern.¹⁵

18. At its fiftieth session in 2006,¹⁶ the Commission on the Status of Women called for mobilization of adequate funding for gender-sensitive development policies and programmes and for national machineries for the advancement of women, through national, regional and international resource mobilization and gender-responsive budget processes in all sector areas, and to allocate adequate funding for women-specific measures.

19. The Monterrey Consensus,¹⁷ adopted at the International Conference on Financing for Development in March 2002, highlighted the importance of a holistic approach to financing for development, including gender-sensitive development, and encouraged the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into development policies at all levels and in all sectors. It stressed the critical need for reinforcing national efforts in building capacity for gender budget policies.

20. The Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness acknowledged that harmonization efforts were needed on cross-cutting issues, such as gender equality and other thematic issues including those financed by dedicated funds.¹⁸

21. The upcoming follow-up international conference on financing for development to review the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, to be held in Qatar in 2008, will provide a strategic opportunity for the Commission to promote concrete action-oriented and gender-sensitive policy recommendations and coherence between macroeconomic policies and the internationally agreed goals on gender equality.
