

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. Yet, 60 years after these words were first enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, many women still struggle daily to have their most basic rights protected. We always wish to live in a world where all women feel safe, have an adequate standard of living and a decent home where they are not disadvantaged in the workplace because of their gender and where the same opportunities as men in all aspects of education and training—Governments are required to ensure that all education is free from stereotypical concepts of the roles of men and women.

Ensuring the employment of women eliminate discrimination in employment so as to ensure that women have the equal right
