At the

55th session of the Commission of the Status of Women

New York, 24 February 2011

(Check against delivery)

Portugal aligns itself seriously with the principles of equality and non-discrimination, which are at the heart of our foreign policy and our national strategy.

Mr. Chairperson,

Distinguished delegates,

Portugal aligns itself seriously with the principles of equality and non-discrimination, which are at the heart of our foreign policy and our national strategy.

Portugal welcomes the organization of this 55th session of the Commission on the Status of Women and the creation of the new United Nations entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, UN Women, which will be the first of successes for the work of Mrs. M. Bachelet.

The challenges we face today in achieving gender equality are immense. The creation of this new entity is an incentive to overcome all the obstacles that persist in the assertion of a more egalitarian society.

It is essential to keep the momentum for change going, involving various communities in the struggle for equality.

The countries which have a firm commitment with gender equality are countries that believe in a true development and in using all available human resources.

Global recognition of women's rights is a major step forward in the development of our contemporary political system. Our commitment towards equality is strong.

Our governance model, based on equality and non-discrimination, has undergone significant progress over the last few years, particularly in the political framework.

A law for the decriminalization of voluntary abortion in the first 10 weeks of pregnancy has been adopted in 2007.

The Parity Act was also adopted in 2006 and stipulates that the lists of candidates for local, legislative and European Parliament elections should be composed so as to ensure a minimum representation of 33% of each sex in eligible positions.

With this Act the political representation of women in my country has increased on average by 10% and we now have a more equal and qualified democracy.

The current government has strengthened the role of women in our history: we have 5 women in a government of 15 ministers.

We have a law on parental licenses in the framework of our Labour Code that strongly promotes the use of paternal licences by men.

I would also highlight the Law against Domestic Violence which is an innovative law in the universe of national terms in victim protection, training of professionals and conviction of perpetrators. I would like to underline the fact that domestic violence is one of the tools to achieving gender equality.

The new Sex Change Law was approved last year. This is in our view a law that fights the suffering of individuals. More recently the Parliament passed a law on opportunity that allows transgender persons to change their name and sex in the civil registry.

Despite its strong legal framework many barriers still persist. The challenge remains in the transition from individual to social equality, one of the central challenges of this new stage of public policy in Portugal.

Simultaneously municipalities promoting gender equality have been restructured around national action plans. Currently Portugal is implementing 6 gender related national Action Plans and Programs:

1. The National Plan for Equality

2. The Plan against Domestic violence

3. The National Plan against Human Trafficking

4. The National Action Plan for the implementation of 1225 Security Council of the UN that represents an important step in the fight against impunity

5. The National Program of Action for the Elimination of Female Genital Mutilation

6. The Strategic Plan for Cooperation, Gender Equality and Women Empowerment within the Community of Portuguese Speaking Countries.

These new national plans affirm the values of equality, citizenship and non-discrimination by having at the core the promotion of citizenship, gender equality and new social gender relations.

Secondly, we promote on the one hand the internalization of new masculinities by young boys and men in general, fostering a shared exercise of power and increasing their participation in the private sphere of life, especially in the care of family members and household tasks. And on the other hand the empowerment of girls and women through a greater independence and autonomy of their choices in the public sphere, from politics to economics.

More women in politics and in business mean more competitiveness and policies that are closer to the needs of people.

Women represent 41% of university graduates in Portugal. They are 40% of research staff and 35% are already one third of the owners of small and medium businesses.

However, unemployment continues to affect "more women than men". That is why it is our work, together now that women must be involved as part of the solution to overcome the economic and social crisis we are experiencing.

Now is the time to change the paradigm and to create a new civilization. A civilization that uses all its human resources, that ensures a redistribution of wealth to reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, that respects the environment and the large percentage of very poor ones; that creates a new relation between people and the environment; that strengthens social cohesion, the associations and solidarity; that commits to the Equality, Education, and Research as long term investments for sustainable development and social cohesion. Finally a civilization helps build a better world.

Portugal will therefore continue to implement its national strategy in what regards a developed society, where women and men, whatever their ethnic origin, age, disability, sexual orientation or religion, can fulfill their personal family and career aspirations on an equal stand.

This balance and commitment is what we deem necessary to build a just and equal society.

Thank you very much.
