at the 56th Session of the Commission on the Status of Women

United Nations Headquarters

New York, 29 February 2012

Maria Clara, Experiences, Distinguished delegates,

It is an honour and pleasure for me to address the 56th Session of the Commission on the Status of Women, one of the most important international forums dedicated to promoting women's rights and to ensure gender equality. The Czech Republic fully aligns itself with the statement delivered earlier on behalf of the Consistent with the high priority the Government of the Czech Republic attaches to promotion of equal opportunities for women and men, the Government annually approves the National Action Plan for the Promotion of Gender Equality. The scope of content of the national action plan follows Beijing Platform for Action. The Plan includes assessment of the implementation of relevant measures and policies of the government introduced during the previous year, as well as priorities and tasks for business for the following year, so called updated measures.

Within the Updated measures, the Government of the Czech Republic supports, among others preparation of trainings, maintenance of suitable work while paying special attention to situation of women from disadvantaged groups, among others women living in rural areas. Following to the Updated measures, in the course of 2011 projects were realized in all regions of the Czech Republic to support women who were inactive on the labour market for longer period of time due to childcare or care for family members with special needs.

In this regard, harmonization of professional and family interests, which at Promotional principle was reiterated, is being actively supported. This is illustrated, for example, by introduction of changes in criteria to receive parental allowances to allow parents with small children to faster return to work. Simplification of return to the labour market is essential particularly for women living in rural areas suffering from higher unemployment rate.

An equal access to education and training allows women including women from rural areas to fully participate in society. Both in the Czech Republic would to maintain a very high share of women university students who currently have 50% of all university students. Also, the employment rate of women is relatively high – 60 % with an increasing trend.

would like to mention that the share of women in the Czech Republic living at the risk of poverty is only 10,1%, the average of the EU member states. Of the total number of women aged between 18 and 64, only 9,4% face this risk of poverty. It is the lowest share in the whole EU. In 2009, only 10,3 % of women aged over 65 were threatened by poverty while the share of men was 11,6%. However, some challenges still remain ahead of us as women in the Czech Republic still face a greater risk of poverty than men.

Our actions in the area of gender equality. In this regard, an important tool for promoting gender equality on a national level is the Charter of Local Self-Government, which was adopted by the Government of the Czech Republic in May 2006. The Charter encourages local authorities to make a formal public commitment to the principle of equality of men and women and to implement it in their commitments within their territory. By approving the resolution in May 2010, the Government of the Czech Republic asked the Commission of its advisory body to present the Charter to the representatives of cities and towns. There are already ten signatories, and I believe that it will significantly increase in near future.

Madam Chair, Excellencies, distinguished delegates,

As my title in consensus is "The theme of this year's session, entitled The empowerment of rural women and their role in poverty and hunger eradication, development and current challenges, women living in rural areas deserve our full attention. I am therefore very pleased that the Commission has the opportunity to discuss this issue thoroughly, and to share experience, examples of good practices and inspiration, which are so important for better performance and work of all of us. The Czech Republic remains committed to the promotion and protection of equal opportunities for women and men and of women's rights, including
